

In today's business environment, managing projects is a critical success factor. Companies and organizations are finding that today, more than ever, there are more projects to complete with limited resources. The projects range from small to large teams, multi-functional, organization-wide projects that command serious capital investment as well as strategic importance for organizations.

Today's challenges and pressures demand that companies execute flawlessly, reduce cost, speed time to market, manage risk, integrate people and technology, and adhere to global standards to enhance competitiveness.
